

THE PROSE POEM: AN INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL

Volume 2 | 1993

The Past: A Letter Steve Wilson

© Providence College

The author(s) permits users to copy, distribute, display, and perform this work under the following conditions: (1) the original author(s) must be given proper attribution; (2) this work may not be used for commercial purposes; (3) the users may not alter, transform, or build upon this work; (4) users must make the license terms of this work clearly known for any reuse or distribution of this work. Upon request, as holder of this work's copyright, the author(s) may waive any or all of these conditions.

The Prose Poem: An International Journal is produced by The Berkeley Electronic Press (bepress) for the Providence College Digital Commons.
<http://digitalcommons.providence.edu/prosepoems/>

Steve Wilson

THE PAST: A LETTER

Is it but sixty years, my friend, since our impassioned revolts, since the coming of steel? Remember the people, strident, resolved? Expecting that any moment the sun would open, revealing its intricate clockwork of pulleys and balances and gears.

But now, all over Michigan, brooding statues of Eugene Ionesco! They bend out into the sunlight. Within their open palms, the feathers of pigeons, drying leaves, small pools of rain.

Crowds of young lovers, making their long pilgrimage from Sault Ste. Marie, from distant Ypsilanti, lounge in the flowers growing wild around the marble pedestals. One can see how deeply they love: with their bodies they release themselves to the tongues of grass; with their breaths they caress the stern folds of Ionesco's trousers.

If only I had some small gift—an offering—for the poet, the lovers, those ubiquitous birds. For immense, romantic Lake Huron, rumbling, rolling upon itself like dark wine.